DESCRIPTION

Sponsored by ALPS

Courtrooms everywhere are seeing a rise in self-represented persons. In this program, a small panel will share insights into the kinds of populations most likely to represent themselves in courts, the barriers self-represented persons face when navigating court rules and procedures, and the kinds of biases they may encounter from judges and legal professionals.

SCHEDULE

11:40 a.m. > Webcast Log-In Opens

11:55 a.m. > Welcome and Introductions

- Saleena Salango - Washington State Bar Association, Seattle

12:00 p.m. > Ensuring Equal Justice for Self-Represented Persons
60 minutes, 1.0 credits Ethics-Equity

Courtrooms everywhere are seeing a rise in self-represented persons. In this program, a small panel that includes a courthouse facilitator coordinator, legal aid staff, and a lived experience expert, will share insights into the kinds of populations most likely to represent themselves in courts, the barriers self-represented persons face when navigating court rules and procedures, and the kinds of biases they may encounter from judges and legal professionals. Panelists will then share ways that legal aid programs, court staff, opposing counsel, and concerned WSBA members can help ensure equal access to the courts and equal justice under law for self-represented persons.

- Kayley Carrillo - Court Equity & Access Program with the Administrative Office of the Courts (AOC), Olympia
- Cassia Gehl - Clark County Volunteer Lawyers Program, Vancouver
